My dear Sir

During our holiday I am amusing myself with doing, amongst other things, an edition of Lodge's Margarite of America, & if you could kindly give me any hint for an introduction, I should esteem it a great kindness. I see nothing about it in your practical ~~Seamanship~~.

I have got such a wretched ledgerhouse pen & ink, I am not writing at all respectably, but I know you do not mind such matters.

I do not see the ~~Other~~ him, so do not know whether there is another article on your Shakespeare folio, but I expect to see a great deal of unnecessary personalities about it, & only hope you are not vexing yourself with the attacks

being made.

Believe me, My dear Sir,

Yours very sincerely

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY J. O. HALLIWELL, ESQ. F. R. S.

IN this work is shown, for the first time, the strong independent historical evidences of the truth of Christianity, to be traced in the writings of the first two centuries, when viewed exclusively of any reliance upon the circumstances recorded in the New Testament.

The essential facts and doctrines of the religion must of course always mainly rest upon the statements contained in its own records; but it is obviously a matter of some importance to establish the probability of its general truth from extrinsic sources.

By the aid of the present volume, the reader can be acquainted in a few hours with every independent testimony of any value, bearing on the evidences of the Christian religion, to be met with in Classical and other works composed before A.D. 200.
